LIFE AT HIGH ALTITUDES.

Extreme Temperatures That Are Endured by British Soldiers Invading Tibet.

The British expedition to Tibet stands in quite as much danger from the extremes of temperature the soldiery are called upon to endure as from the bullets of the natives of that little known country. The "mission," as the invasion is diplomatically called, has necessitated the continued exposure of a very large number of untried men to life at altitudes ranging from 10,000 feet and 15,700 feet, and the general results are of considerable value.

The lowest temperature yet reached on the route has been 25 degrees F. at Chuggia, on the Tangia, which was, however, only an encampment. Of actual nightly exposure to cold of men and animals Tuna probably holds the record with 17 degrees F. But Phari has repeatedly reached 15 degrees F., and Kamparab, nine miles distant from Phari, might, if continual registration had been possible there, show a lower figure than either. The normal night minimum during January and February is probably 10 degrees F. for 15,000 feet, warming to 7 degrees F. for 10,000 feet.

Mountain sickness has been closely observed by the medical men accompanying the mission. Indigestion has been common on account of the eating of imperfectly cooked food. At 15,000 feet water boils at a temperature of about 30 degrees F. lower than at sea level, and the normal amount of cooking is therefore quite inadequate. At 15,000 feet it is almost impossible to boil rice properly. The dal, the common red lentil of India, affords a curious example of the difficulty of cooking at high elevations. Out of five different kinds of dal supplied to the troops only one is capable of being cooked at all at heights above 10,000 feet. It is difficult to make the native understand these aberrations of gastrology, and a great deal of insufficient cooking has been the natural result.

REGARDING MISQUOTATIONS

Quotations Used by Young Writers Should in Every Instance Be Verified.

One of the rules that even young writers and readers should bear in mind is this: "Verify your quotations." And, if possible, go to the original source rather than rely on other authority, advises the author of "Books and Reading," in St. Nicholas. The reason for the rule is easy to see. Usually a quotation becomes popular because it is worth while, and to misquote is often to lose the value of the words. Thus people often say: "A little knowledge is a dangerous thing." But that is not true. All knowledge is worth having, even a little. They mean "half-knowledge," or incorrect knowledge, which is not really knowledge at all! What Pope wrote was: "A little learning is a dangerous thing;" and what he meant was that a little learning makes one presumptuous, while thorough learning gives humility—an idea likewise set forth in the saying that wisdom begins with the feeling that one is ignorant.

So, verify your quotations for fear you may put into currency a counterfeit note.

At the same time it is to be remembered that some few quotations have been improved by changes introduced by those who have misquoted. These improvements are rare; however, and it is safest to retain the old forms where there is any doubt.

Another usual misquotation besides that mentioned is—
"The quality of mercy is not strained;

It falleth as the gentle dew from Heaven—"

which you may correct for yourself, and then may inquire whether it is likely that the popular change is an improvement, when the nature of dew is understood.

DANGER IN HAND-SHAKING.

The Touching of Palms in Mutual Pressure Nothing More Than Exchange of Microbes.

A Belgian savant has discovered that there is danger in shaking hands. He has recently published a treatise in which he says that the mutual pressure of the hand in friendly salutation means nothing more than an exchange of microbes, says Medical Talk for the Home.

He has found that there are 80,000 microbes inhabiting every half-inch of the hand, and if they are disturbed by a handshake they will arouse themselves, break up camp, and go over and settle on the other hand, so that in every hand-shake there is a mutual exchange of microbes.

This learned man goes on to say that the most dangerous persons to shake hands with are the doctors, surgeons, nurses, hairdressers, butchers, sausage-makers, tripe merchants, tanners and leather-dressers. When you meet any of these people put your hands behind you and absolutely refuse to shake hands with them. Tell them you don't want to trade microbes with them. That the kind they have are dangerous and you don't want to mix them up with yours, which are harmless.

There are a few people, according to this savant, that we may probably be safe in shaking hands with, though he is not quite sure. They are the ones who work in metal. He thinks the metal would soon set up a sort of oxidation that would act as an antiseptic. So if you happen to meet a worker in metal you can practice hand-shaking on him with little fear of any bad results, as far as microbes are concerned.

But as we cannot always know what a person's occupation is, if we accept this Belgian savant's opinion, we had better quit shaking hands and salute our friends only with our heads and our hats. Or we might always wear gloves. That would probably keep the microbes from getting mixed.

SOMETHING OF A VACABOND

The Name of the Man Who Started Apple Culture in the West Is Forgotten.

The history of the apple in the United States is almost contemporaneous with the settlement of the country. It is definitely known, states an exchange, that the first apple trees planted in America were imported by the Dutch settlement at New York in 1614. Apple trees were also known to have been growing at Jamestown, Va., as early as 1622. Until within the last half century apples were grown almost solely for cider-making, as is the case today in France. As hard cider will produce drunkenness and a horrible katzenjammer, William Penn advised his colonists in Pennsylvania to cultivate indigenous fruits alone, as apples were then used almost exclusively for making cider or applejack.

Many of the orchards of the pioneers of the middle west were grown from seeds obtained in a peculiar way. Some man whose name has been forgotten, and who is remembered only by the appellation of "Apple-Seed Johnny," traveled through the west and scattered among the settlers untold quantities of apple seeds. He gave them away free of charge and he was given a hearty welcome at every cabin door.

The last decade or two has shown wonderful development of the large commercial apple orchards in the west and the industry has now assumed large proportions. Apples, for instance, are exported to England and many foreign countries. Apple cores from the big drying establishments are purchased by eastern buyers and shipped to France to be used in the adulteration of wines and champagne. A large part of this champagne and wine is shipped back to America in wine casks made at Poplar Bluff, Mo., in the largest barrel factory in the world.
